INSURRECTOS THAN REGULARS Villiam Kane Had Exciting Experiences in Two and a Half Years' Trip

William Kane, who left here about two and a half years ago, enlisting in the Panama canal zone police, is home again at his home. No. 41 West Main street, having arrived, this week direct from Douglass, Arizona, across the line from Agua Prieta, where the Mexican insurrectos scored their first significant sulccess in the fight against the Diaz government. Mr. Kane hashad a varied experience while away seeing much of the Spanish-American countries, enjoying many pleasant and some unpleasant experiences.

In September, 1908, he entisted a Meriden for the canal zone was located first at Ancon, then at Empire and later at the Culebra prison. He served five months on the force and then resigned to go up into the interior on an ironwork job at Boca del Toro. As soon as he was sole he got away from there, going over 10 Costa Ries, where he stayed for six months, but was still pursued by fever, which sent him into the hospital five times in Arkona and Texas. One of the places he worked was at the Pecos High bridge, near Del Rio. Texas, a structure 221 feet high and 2,150 feet long. This was a ten months' job on which the construction, Mr. Kane iried to work on the Roosewell Irrigation project, but a ten-hour trial there showed him that the altitude was too much in his weakended condition from the fever and he had to seek lower levels.

Probably the most interesting of Mr. Kane's experiences came through his results of contractors established the remarkable record of not having a man killed in the construction, Mr. Kane irried to work on the Roosewell Irrigation project, but a ten-hour trial there showed him that the altitude was too much in his weakended condition from the fever and he had to seek lower levels.

Probably the most interesting of Mr. Kane's experiences came through his r levels. Probably the most interesting of Mi er levels.

Frobably the most interesting of Mr. Kane's experiences came through his location at Douglass. Arizona, on an ironwork joo during the recent fighting along the boundary line where Uncle Sam's troops were on guard to preserve the neurality and incidentally to brotect the American citizens who wanted to get a good sight of the battle. Mr. Kane has a collection of nearly 100 post cards, which give an excellent idea of conditions or both sides of the boundary line. They sow the adobe houses and the bull pen of Agua Prieta shot full of holes, the bodies of soldiers left to bleach on the sands of the foothills, pictures of Madero, Red Lopez and other of the leaders, different Americans of his acquaintance who were in the insurrectoranks, and places which he visited within a few moments after the fighting was over. According to Mr. Kane, the insurrectos took every precantion to protect American onlookers from flying bullets, agreeing to attack Agua Prieta from the east, so that their shooting would be parallel with the boundary line and not across it. He speaks in high praise of the favorable impression made upon the people of Douglass by the American troops quartered there. In fact, he says that the Douglass people were so well pleased with the troops that they will probably endeavor to have a regular army post located there. While the pleased with the troops that they will probably endeavor to have a regular army post located there. While the insurrector had little regular military organization and he had often seen as many as thirteen different nationalities in their ranks, Mr. Kane said that the Texas people who wandered across the line would a good deal rather take the chance of going among the insurrecto ranks than among the Mexican regulars. The insurrectos were always glad to see visitors, but the regulars were of uncertain temper and not ody wanted to trust them. ulars were of uncertain ten-not ody wanted to trust them.
